ABOUT ASIA CENTRE

It provides meeting facilities and services for academic and professional development, communications and outreach, research and publications, and development and technical assistance.

Asia Centre connects peoples and regions through collaborative partnerships with educational institutions, international organizations, non-profit organizations and other institutions in the private and public sector.

The Centre harnesses its strategic location and strong international networks to co-convene activities to address contemporary issues in the region.

The germination period leading to the incorporation of the Centre in 2015, spans some seven years of reflection, conceptualization and preparatory work, including acquisition of infrastructure. The idea of a Centre grew initially out of reflections on the changing nature of both the tertiary education and not-for profit sectors. There was a gap where universities needed industry and community connected teaching partners, while civil society needed evidence-based research to support its work. The need to respond to this gap spurned a natural complicity and spirit of innovation that carried forward the idea of the Centre into 2015.
Laying the Groundwork

Formal preparations for establishing Asia Centre began in 2012 when a preliminary six-month study and planning operation was undertaken in Bangkok, Thailand. Bangkok, was selected as Asia Centre’s strategic location given the city’s position as regional and international crossroads for people, networks and institutions.

Setting Up Infrastructure

The Asia Centre project began with the acquisition of a 120 sqm office space next to Phayathai BTS Station and Airport Link in central Bangkok. This was followed with by the renovation and setting up the physical premises of the Centre including the purchase and installation of furniture and fittings.
